in the land Work - ing what the Found - ers planned.
she may be Strong for all E - ter - ni - ty.

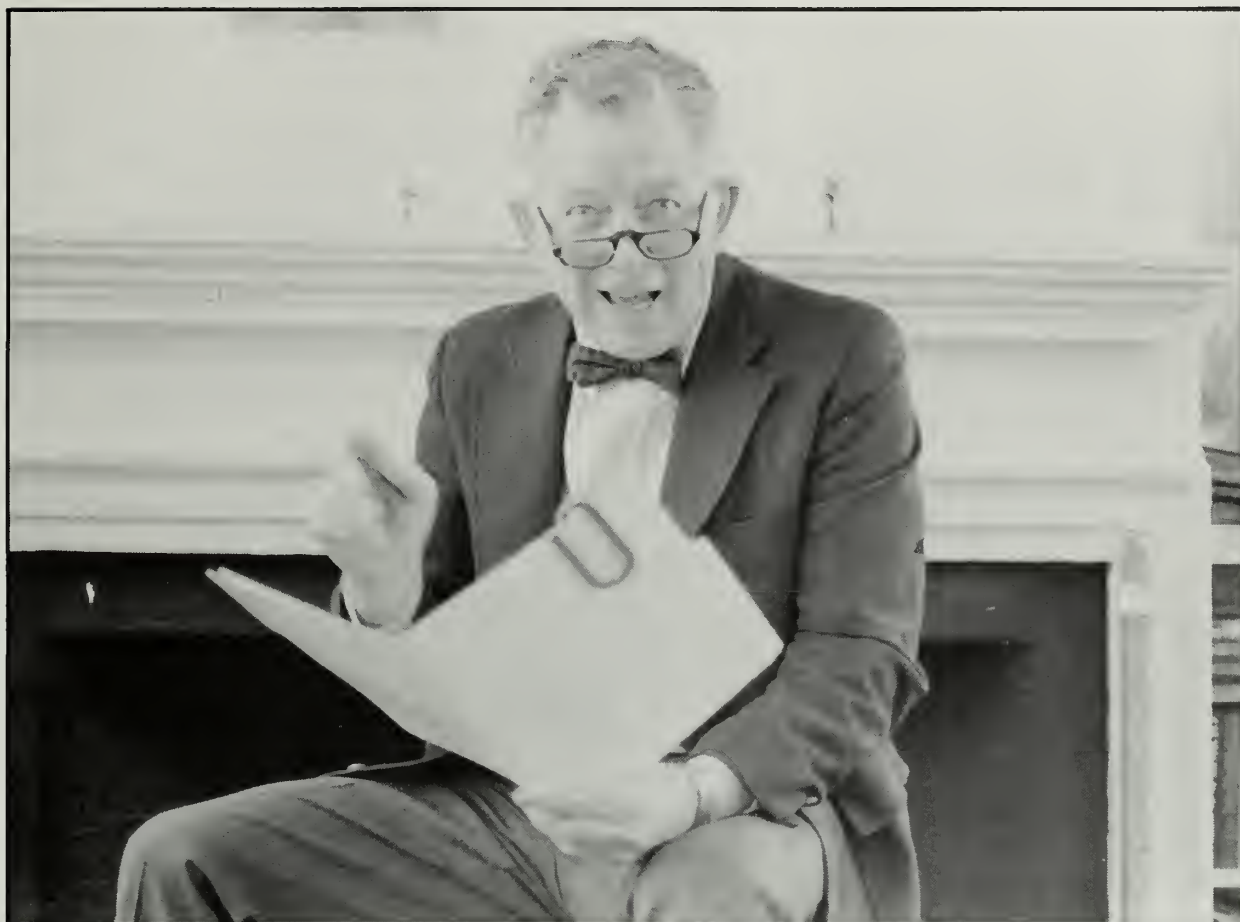

* Those who can reach the "f" should sing:

Those who cannot should sing:

We dedicate the 1983-84 Pot Pourri to

Joshua L. Miner III

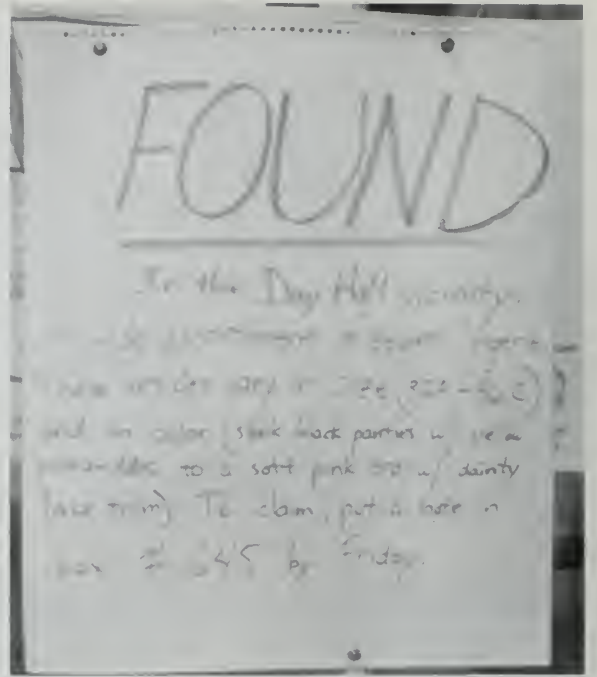

*With gratitude and love we wish him
the very best*

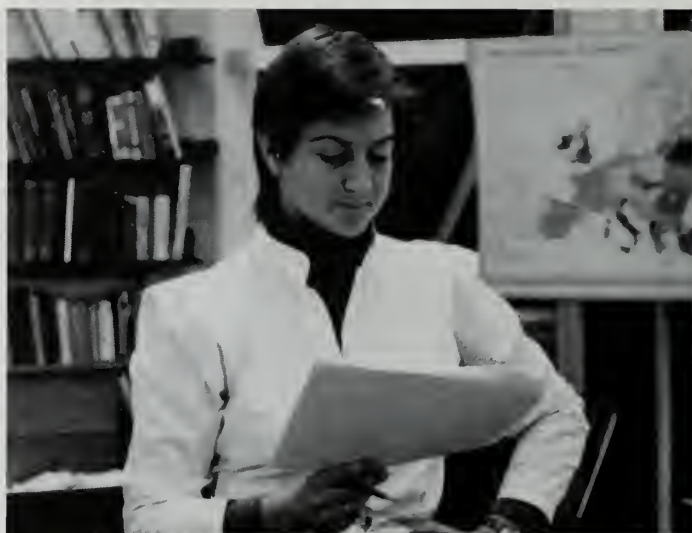

Perhaps there is some natural law at work here. I mean, all of us walk around with thousands of useless thoughts in our brains, and those suckers probably want OUT.

DICKIE THIRAS

Where do I start?
It's a story with almost no ending,
Not a fairy tale in the least,
For the first time it seemed so easy,
And now it's not that way,

I don't know,
What to say or in which corner to hide,
I want to kill the uncertainty inside,
It's no good,

You can't slam,
I won't look at your back,
My eyes will drown my body,
My heart will drown my soul,

And I can feel,
I feel the lump which grows in my throat,
I feel the liquid dripping off my nose,
Do I have to grow?
My toes are cold.

Will I be straight,
Will I be left waiting,
Was it worthwhile?
It never is.
I need a friend.

I like my blood,
But I'm losing it so fast,
My skin and bones will suffocate me.
Everyone is quiet,
But not me.

I am a storm,
I am a nonthinker,
I am a friend,
I am one who cares,
One who cares too much for others.
Is this good?

Wandering little preps we were.
We went down in Andover and sojourned there, few in number.
And there we became a Senior Class, great, mighty, & populous.
And the Faculty treated us harshly and afflicted us and laid upon us hard bondage.
Then we cried to the Lord, the God of our fathers.
And the Lord heard our voice and saw our affliction, our toil, and our oppression.
And the Lord brought us out of Andover with a mighty hand and an outstretched arm, with great terror, with signs and wonders.
And He brought us into a new land called University, a land flowing with milk and honey and the fermented products thereof.
And we shall rejoice in all the good which the Lord has given us.

no man, if men are gods, but if gods must

IF YOU REALLY want to hear about it, the first thing you'll probably want to know is where I was born, and what my lousy childhood was like, and how my parents were occupied and all before they had me, and all that David Cooperfield kind of crap, but I don't feel like going into it, if you want to know the truth. In the first place, that stuff bores me, and in the second place, my parents would have about two hemorrhages a piece if I told anything pretty personal about them. Besides, I'm not going to tell you my whole goddamn autobiography.

Zorba shook his head. 'No, you're not free,' he said. The string you're tied to is perhaps longer than other people's. That's all. You're on a long piece of string boss; you come & go, & think you're free, but you never cut the string in two. And when people don't cut that string I'll cut it someday! I said defiantly, 'cause Zorba's words had touched an open wound in me and hurt. 'It's difficult, boss, very difficult, you need a touch of folly to do that: folly, d'ya see? You have to risk everything! But you've got such a strong head, it'll always get the better of you. But if a man doesn't break the string, tell me, what flavor is left in life? The most merciful thing in the world, I think, is the inability of the human mind to correlate all its contents. We live on a placid island of ignorance in the midst of black seas of infinity, and it was not meant that we should voyage far. The sciences, each straining in its own direction, have hither — to harm us little; but some day the piecing together of dissociated knowledge will open up such terrifying vistas of reality, and of our frightening position therein, that we shall either go mad from the revelation or flee from the deadly light into the peace and safety of a new dark age.

"In formulating any philosophy, the first consideration must always be: What can we know? That is, what can we be sure we know, or sure that we know we knew it. If indeed it is at all knowable. Or have we simply forgotten it and are too embarrassed to say anything? Descarte hinted at the problem when he wrote, 'My mind can never know my body, although it has become quite friendly with my legs.' By 'knowable', incidently, I do not mean that which can be known by perception of the senses, or that which can be grasped by the mind, but more that which can be said to be Known or to possess the Knownness or Knowability or at least something that you can mention or a friend."

To succeed, you must learn how to get people to do what you want them to do. Success is largely salesmanship. And that is largely persuasion based on understanding human nature. A winning personality, based on unusual knowledge and ability, counts heavily. To solve a problem, the first requisite is to know clearly what the problem consists of. To attain success, it will help if you realize that the problem consists of inducing people to do what you want them to do.

BEDTIME STORIES . . .

Let me fly like a licorice fungus

The vodka I bought hides under my sweaters
And all I can hope
Is that absence does make the heart grow fonder
Ah, but you don't know
I am old, I have grown
Too bad, it's not much better
Even though my Dad said
That being a senior girl is the worst,
I've had my share of licorice all-nighters
And jaw-breaker weekends.
I thought I'd be free
But there's no one to be free with
Or is freedom not what I wanted?
Let my fly . . .
I think "Food Glorious Food" was my motto
Because I sure ate a lot of Cheetos.
But mostly this place grew on me.
Rather like a fungus, some said
The illusions became easier to spot.
But I loved my affair with motorcycle maintenance
Everyday I look at the Niagra Falls Calender.
It tells me how many days are left
To love, hate this school, this place
To worry about integrity, ideals, future
And to listen, self-centered, to other's words.
Well that's all folks
We hope you enjoyed
Your champagne and strawberries by Pomp's Pond.

I can remember a few years back when I wanted to quit school and join a rock'n roll band. Back then I had the confidence in myself to try it, That inner drive — the strong will and youthful cockiness that assures you that you will conquer the world. I wanted it all for the glory, for the kicks, and so that when I made my way to the top, I could scream at the world, "Hey world, I went the distance!" My father didn't have much confidence in me. He thought rock'n roll was for shitheads. He told me one evening that if I pursued music, I'd end up a bum playing in bars the rest of my life. I had my first major argument with him that night. He thought it'd be good to send me off to a boarding school back east; maybe my views would change. A boarding school back east? What the fuck, I'd never get in, besides, it was March already, and most kids applied in the fall.

I got a note over the summer from this school; my Dad wasn't too happy. They said I applied late and there was almost no chance of me getting in. I wasn't bummed.

It was in September a friday night at around 7:30 p.m. I had just finished apologizing to my mother for calling her a bitch. I didn't mean to, really. It's the last week night before school starts and I get this long distance phone call from some guy named Tom Speers, from a private school. Why would a private school be calling Holy shit. I shit in my pants when he told me I was accepted.

I called Butterfield, "Listen Butter, I got into this private school back east and I'll have to drop out of the band."

"You're a fuck-up," he said, "What did you go and get accepted for?"

"Hey, how was I to know they would like me?"

I sold my drum-set. Wow, that was painful. My song-writing started to crumble too. Damn, what if I did quit school back then and gave it a shot? How far would I have gotten? Would I have gone the distance? The Distance. Going the distance means a lot to me. Going the distance means everything to me.

FALL TERM

I love the shrieking girls
Even though they cling to my sides
The setting sun makes me happy
Even though it makes me cry.
I love the smell of wood fires
Even though the smoke gets in my eyes.
The water is cool and fresh
Even though I get scared of fish.
I love everything new happening
Even though it's all happened before.
I love all my new friends
Even though they are old.
I love the memories of leaves
Even though they are still here.

ORIENTATION

This school, perhaps all schools, consisted in a series of parades. Some, like his, were resplendent processions, applauded all the way; others were solitary hikes to which hardly anyone gave more than one dismissing glance. But everyone, every single student, had to form, if only by himself, some sort of parade past all of the others, who gave at least one alert glance to detect any failure, each chink of vulnerability. Very occasionally and grudgingly, they might find something to admire in someone other than the lords of creation such as he.

— Peace Breaks Out, John Knowles

Searching through the lonely darkness
Feeling through what is real
I'm searching for my heaven
Walk the sandy field.

Where to run when trouble arises
Someone stomp out my fuse
Before I get unwanted surprises
Take my toys and my booze.

Rolling through unanswered questions
Rolling through like a wheel
I'm searching for my heaven
Walk the sandy field

The wind is soaking through my skin
The snow melts into my blood
My toes are frozen, hearts grow cold
Lacking the instrument, love

Stripping down my bare emotions
Believe me I do not steal
I'm searching for my heaven
Walk the sandy field.

Mr. Wilson sat slouched in the fake leather Ezy-Boy recliner; can of Blue Ribbon beer in hand, bowl of pretzels precariously balanced half on his beer belly, half on the arm-rest of the chair; and stared at the black and white Sony that just seemed to hang on the wall. The Thanksgiving Day Bowl was on, and Mr. Wilson stared blankly at the set in amazement — Notre Dame, the favorite, was being beaten by Brigham Young University in an upset.

Chuck Griffin, Notre Dame's head coach, furiously paced up and down the sidelines. "Goddamn this weather," he mumbled, "Christ! Barteki is down. Where's the trainer?" Damnit — where's the goddamn trainer when you need him?" He yelled, "Joe! Let's get out there and see if he's okay."

Chuck and Joe marched out through the rain to BYU's own 27 yard line to where Barteki lay writhing in pain. While Joe checked Barteki for injuries, Coach Griffin's mind raced — 'Christ! We're down 20-14 with three minutes left in the game and my best quarterback is fuckin' injured.'

"What is it, Joe?"

"His knee. Looks pretty bad, Chuck, his ligaments might be torn. I want to get him to the hospital. Get the ambulance out here."

The ambulance drove out onto the field and Joe, Chuck, and the paramedics lifted Barteki onto the stretcher and into the ambulance. Coach Griffin returned to the bench grumbling, arguing with himself: "Who the hell am I gonna put in to replace him? Jackson's throws haven't been too great lately and we have got to throw. Skummer? Damn — I can't put him in, his left foot has been bothering him."

Coach Griffin looked up and down the bench; his jet black eyes meeting each of his players and seeming to pierce them. "Wilson!" he gruffly yelled through the din of the crowd, "get your butt in there for Barteki and let's see some work. I want to see you pass. Damnit — we're not gonna lose this game."

Wilson's eyes widened, he turned pale, then immediately after, turned bright red. He was nervous; replacing Barteki in the Thanksgiving Bowl was a big job — it would be hard to fill his shoes — but Wilson was determined to try. "Sure thing Coach," he said as he grabbed his helmet and jogged onto the field.

Wilson got into the huddle and explained, "Okay it's the fourth down; Coach wants us to throw; play 382. Burton you better be there in the end zone. Break."

The Notre Dame Offense lined up and Wilson got more nervous. He looked up to the bench: Coach Griffin continued to pace up and down the field. He looked out at the stadium: the crowd roared with excitement. He wiped the sweat from his hands and then called the play.

"382 — 382 — hutt — hike." The ball was in his hands, and the front line resisted the rushing BYU defense. Wilson faded back for the pass, looked for Burton, and on seeing he hadn't reached the end zone yet, backed up and over to the left some more. One of BYU's defensemen had broken through and, with a gleam of grim determination in his eyes, rushed towards Wilson. There was still no sign of Burton, so he decided that he wasn't going to miss that opportunity to score, so he tucked that pig skin under his arm and ran — he would do it by himself.

Wilson dodged BYU's #13 and dashed down the left sideline towards the end zone. He ran, the crowd blurred into a mass of bright colors, the applause and cheering a sharp ringing in his ears, his focus on the end zone: it would mean Notre Dame would win the game. 25 . . . 15 yards — BYU defensemen simply couldn't catch Wilson; he was throwing all his energy into this last run. 10 yards . . . each step seemed to last an eternity. The rasping in his chest, the beating of his heart overpowered the noise of the fans. 8 yards — Wilson began to wheeze and neared the last ounce of his strength, but still he ran on. 5 yards — two BYU defensemen were almost upon him, his own blockers were unable to hold them back. Still Wilson ran in a frenzy, focusing on the bright orange markers in the corners of the end zone, oblivious to the drumbeat of his heart in his ears. 3 yards — and Thump.

Wilson looked to the floor and saw the bowl of pretzels scattered all over the floor and around the recliner. On the television screen. Howard Cosell finished announcing the final score, "And in an upset, BYU has beaten top seated Notre Dame by a score of 20-14. We'll have the post-game discussions after these messages."

ANDOVER EXETER

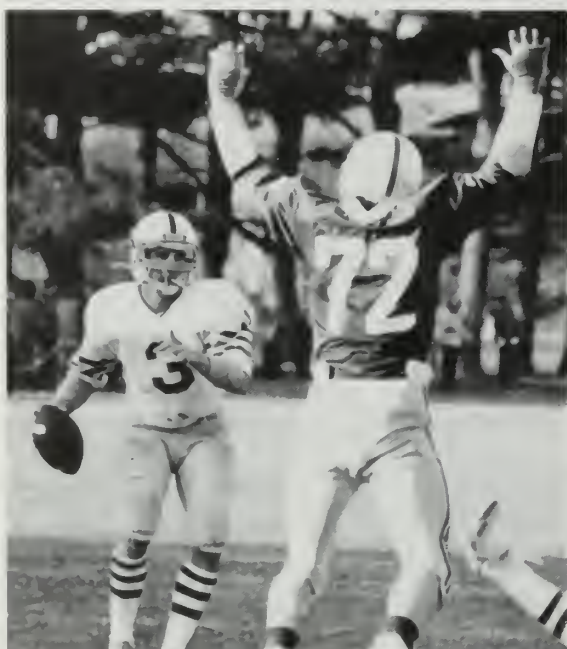

One had to sense the upcoming craziness when Jane McGilvary came to that all-school Andover-Exeter week kickoff wearing that blue wig. Andover feasted on red meat, and much to the chagrin of Exeter was definitely not screwed in 1984.

It really began the night before the game when Andover began its traditional rally. Torches and letter sweaters led the Andover army up the vista, each soldier touched by some supernatural antiexie energy, screaming his head off, clanging Bong for Andover bells and gripping his toilet-paper fireworks.

In other words mass hysteria ensued. But the typical school hysteria was taken one step further this year. The old theme of Chaos vs. Order ran through someone's head, and that night they chose Chaos. Unfortunately for the 'order' the rest of the school chose chaos also, swarming across campus in two waves — much past sign in — chanting "do it for Don" on the lawn of Phelps house, arranging commons trays on a huge "A" on the vista in front of SamPhil, and generally defying authority. The Andover mob's efforts did not go unrewarded, for of course Andover shut out Exeter. (Appropriately not mentioning that last-ditch effort by the panic-stricken Exies for 7 points.)

Andies woke up on Sunday reminded of Saturday, some by the wisps of toilet paper blowing in the trees, some by the "A" branded on the vista, others by an overly throbbing head. All knew that this year something was thrown to compound the Andover-Exeter explosion. Perhaps it was blue and white day, maybe because Andover crushed all Exeter opponents the week before. It was probably because the Admissions Office has been doing a great job. This year's Andover was a collection of people with more spunk, spirit, and balls than anyone every anticipated.

SPECIAL OLYMPICS

BALLET

J. M. LARVERE

At first those punk wraparounds were mod. You could get them mirrored, jet black, or with rims of any color. Some girls wore those sparkly ones that were heart-shaped, and a few wore those pointy cat-glasses hung over from the late fifties. A die-hard preppie would wear those mirrored pilot's glasses, but that soon passed along with the die-hard preppies. Then radical changes in the sunglass style occurred. The wraparound began to loosen up, giving way to those Clint Eastwood and Blues Brothers jobs. Vuarnets came on the scene, and have taken hold in the pretty world of fashion ever since. If you didn't want to spend seventy-five bucks on a pair of baby Vuarnets, much less thirty-five on a pair of regular ones, you could always pay ten for a pair of phoneys. The really economical bought those Ferrari or Mazzurati babies that folded into a little pouch, but they really weren't fashionable and are probably now gathering dust in closets. Presently, the reigning champion of sunglasses is the Wayfarer. Expensive but très dans le vent. Wayfarers grace many a face on campus. Maybe it's because of Tom Cruise. Probably it's because they're totally cool.

The PHILLIPPIAN

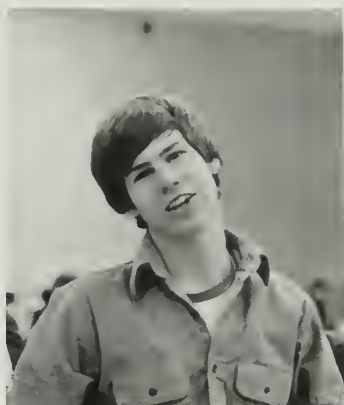

WINTER TERM

I nearly died the other day, not the kind of death where you get squashed by a truck or poisoned or drowned, but the kind where everything decides to stop for an undetermined amount of time. I was just sitting there and things started to shut down all on their own. Actually I was probably helping a whole lot but wasn't really tuned into it. Anyhow everything around me simply existed, raw, sheer existence. The lamp was the lamp, the walls were just plain sheetrock on two-by-fours. I was thinking about the posters in my room, who the hell are these people anyways? Then suddenly I thought about my future, in a box with no shoes or socks. Then I decided that eternity was a long time to spend in the wrong place. So I broke loose, a sort of awakening you might say. I love the way people always say "It's all relevant," and then go on to explain how everything has to do with something else. I prefer to just say it, "It's all relevant."

WINTER SCENES

Isn't it strange, the power G.W. has? As soon as you have your first free period, you feel the pull from its marble depths, and you feel irregular until you give in to it. You are led to mail, announcements, donuts if you have money, Dickie, or that frustrating change machine.

You get caught up in the student blob squeezing its way downstairs chattering, laughing, or whining about tests just taken. You usually get junk mail, something about a cluster coffee or a concert you'd never go to. After filing your mail, you probably inch over to the Cluster Bulletin Board and stare at it for a couple of minutes. If you're not hungry, you get flushed out the door near the Drama Lab with the stream of other nourished people. Otherwise you head upstream to the donuts. If you've got a friend selling donuts, you usually ask if he'll slip you one, but you almost always end up paying. With donut dust covering your mouth, you clamber back upstairs to nod to friends and acquaintances. Then there's always Dickie to talk to for a while.

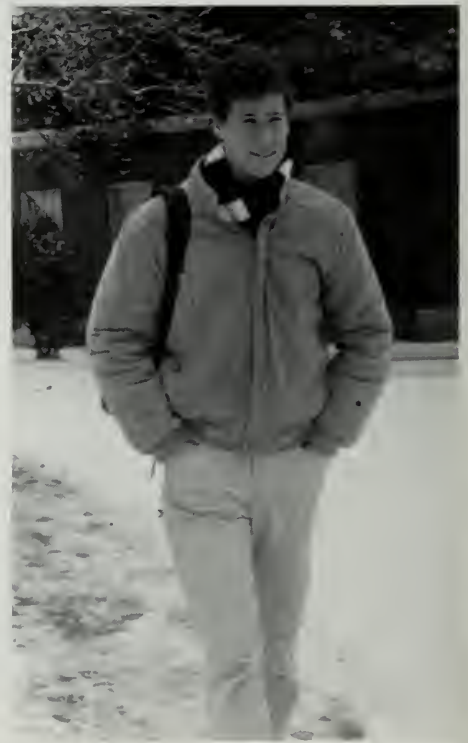

G.W. has compounded importance to Seniors. For most it is where the future is decided. Those tiresome walks up to, and in turn long waits in College Counseling, all for the lofty purpose of getting into college, climaxes in either the large or small envelope you get in your mailbox one fateful day. But no matter what happens then, you know there'll still be dogs outside begging for your donuts, and further on classes and work to do, and still further a life to get a grip on.

G.W.

Falling Apart

The snow this morning
 Looks like a crystalline forest
 And I forgot to wear my sunglasses.
 I woke up from my dream
 Under my three quilts
 To a song I didn't like.
 I got up anyway.
 My wool socks warmed my feet.
 I tried to concentrate but my room stuffed me in.
 My fingers are falling apart
 And my dreadful habits are getting to me.
 I'm tired of sleeping off my problems —
 They wake up with me in the morning.
 I'm tired of tearing my fingernails.
 I'm tired of not being able to cry.

SPECIAL INSTRUCTIONS fuck it

All these adolescents, these not-yet-adults, perching here for a few years, thinking they know who they are, thinking they are in a position to judge one another, trying to present set, confident versions of themselves to the world and, all the while, babes in the woods really, self-ignorant and confused, at best very partial semi-adults, saying in effect: I'm completely sound and normal and a total human being and aware of everything about myself, while in reality they were most of them cross-eyed with confusion about themselves, insecure as a house on stilts in a hurricane, pretending manfully, or almost manfully, that they were not stumbling blindfolded onto the pitfalls of their futures.

FOUR YEARS

I want to say something to you seniors about goodbyes. And what I want to say has something to do with you leaving Andover, but more, I suppose with you leaving me. Saying goodbye this year is harder than ever. You would think that I'd be ecstatic about shipping you off to college so I could begin my sabbatical. After all, I won't have to correct your unintelligible papers anymore . . . and I won't have to throw erasers at you in class when you make a dumb answer . . . and I won't have to interrupt my Saturday night to give you parietals . . . Do I ever interrupt you during your parietals?? All this aside — the heart of the matter is — I'll miss you guys next year.

Oh I've tried to convince myself what a pain in the neck you were but I could never quite believe it. And so, when I sat down to write this talk, instead of being cynical and funny, all I could be was honest and filled with sentiment. When I think about this year, I think about how each and every day your smiles, your words, and your laughter rekindled my spirit even in the gloomiest times. In the classroom, in the dorm, in the symposium, on the athletic field, even on the pathways around campus you warmed the world with your love, your kindness and your generosity.

And so to say goodbye to you is not like saying goodbye to a passing acquaintance — it's like saying goodbye to a dear friend, or a brother or a sister. Goodbyes have always been hard for me, because my heart knows that time and distance and mortality can separate us in many ways, and that every goodbye feels a little like a final one.

I don't think our culture does a very good job with goodbyes. We put such a premium on progress, on getting ahead and moving on that we forget how important our goodbyes are. But I'm not like that. If I were running this graduation, we would have a party before you left that lasted all day and all night with lots of food and dancing and plenty of time for tears and laughter.

Well, it's not an Italian school yet, but we still do have some precious time left together, we still do have time for tears and for laughter. We still have time for the word, the gesture or the embrace for someone we love.

If you have ever read THE LITTLE PRINCE, you might remember the secret that the fox tells the little prince: "It is only with the heart that one can see rightly." Over and over again you have shown yourself to be a class that sees with the heart, and so, before I finish I'd like to read you a poem of the heart for this occasion. The title of the poem is GOODBYE, written by Galway Kinnell. It's about his mother who is on her deathbed, soon to be buried near her home in Derry, Ireland — but it is also about a remembrance Kinnell has of one of his students named Syllest.

GOODBYE

My mother, poor woman, lies tonight in her last bed. It's snowing, for her, in her darkness.
I swallow down the goodbyes I won't get to use,
tasteless, with wretched mouth-water;
whatever we are, she and I, we're nearly cured.

The night years ago when I walked away from that final class of junior high school students in Pittsburgh, the youngest of them ran after me down the dark street. "Goodbye!" she called, snow swirling across her face, tears falling.

In Pittsburgh tonight, those who were young will be less young, those who were old, or more likely no more; and the street where Syllest, fleetest of my darlings, caught up with me and hugged me and said goodbye, will be empty. Well, one day the streets all over the world will be empty — already in heaven, listen, the golden cobblestones have fallen still — everyone's arms will be empty, everyone's mouth, the Derry earth.

It is written in our hearts, the emptiness is all.
That is how we have learned, the embrace is all.

Goodbye seniors. This little talk was my embrace for you all. God bless you.

COMMENCEMENT 1984

And at the end of it they were graduated, stunned and delirious and muddled and exhilarated.

"So this is what Commencement's like. Commencement. You know, I never thought of it until this minute. It means 'beginning', doesn't it? That's a good word. Makes me feel better."

Tug said wonderingly, "I can't believe it's over."

"You mean the service or —"

I mean everything. All of it. Everything that's happened here."

Nick looked at him, and then said slowly, "Maybe it isn't. Maybe it never really is." . . .

"I have a funny feeling we're not going to get over this, everything that's happened here. I think that it's built-in for life, now."

John Knowles, Peace Breaks Out

The graduates and their families and the faculty all responded to an inebriating sense of release. A finality had arrived, grades and standings and credits had been established forever, even the tangled threads of friendships and rivalries and hatreds and sicknesses and ignorances had reached a decisive turning point. Some surging new element of freedom, one of academia's secret powers, had been unleashed.

The Andover Inn

The half hour drive from downtown Boston will bring you to the Andover Inn, located on the campus of Philips Academy in Andover. The menu features many popular American and continental dishes. On Sundays from 4:00 to 9:00 the Dutch-Indonesian Rijsttafel is featured. This "happening" is unique for the Boston area and consists of plain white rice and approximately 20 different side dishes. The atmosphere is continental and dinner is served by candlelight. Classical piano music is performed every Monday through Saturday evening.

The great soaring venerable trees, full-leaved, arched gothically above the shining lawns; the sweep of courtyards and expansive commons, of playing fields and parades of Georgian buildings, radiated a quiet, settled solidity and peace.

John Knowles, Peace Breaks out
